Problem

Today, there's an overwhelming amount of applications and services out there conceived to fulfill a specific purpose. Most of us care little about the majority of them and had enough of apps on our phones, while the rest of us just have no more space for them.

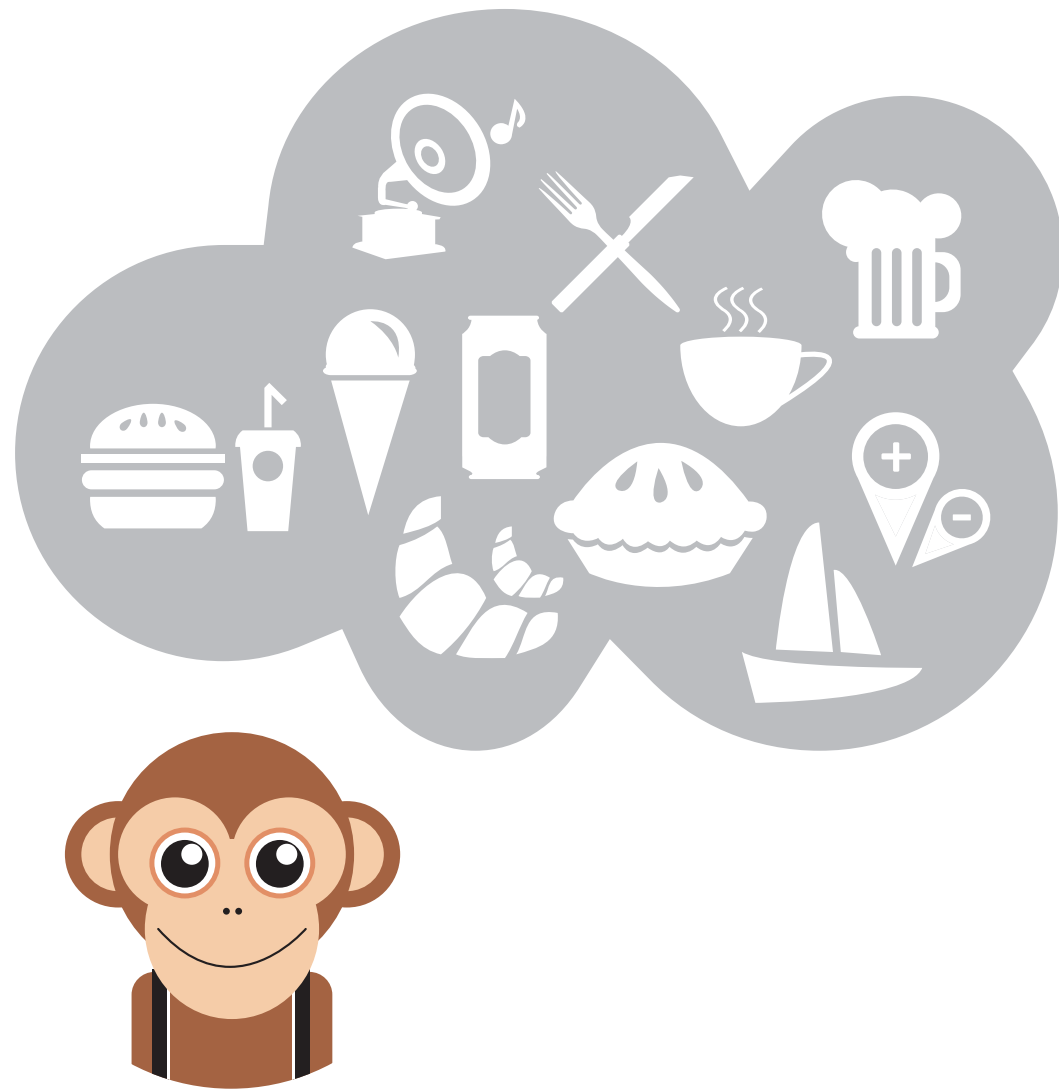

It's a time consuming endeavour to manually check our friends' social network profiles, across multiple social media websites and apps; read through their posts, to find out about interesting places to go to.

A common alternative was to use local search and discovery services, but the reviews and recommendations there tend to lack empathy and seldom align with our preferences.

Solution

Introduction to Solution

But why are we using apps? Mainly 2 things, to find out what our friends are up to and find out about potential places i would want to go to.
